Workshops can spark transformation, but without something tangible to return to, that impact often fades. The Guardian Monster Healing Zine can not only extend care beyond the room, but it can be a stand-alone resource for your community or company (in lieu of a workshop experience) by offering participants a creative, accessible, and deeply personal tool they can revisit on their own time.

Designed for professional organizations and nonprofits, this zine supports communities including:

- Individuals in recovery
- Survivors of violence
- People impacted by incarceration or displacement
- LGBTQIA+ communities (who are often underserved in ways not always visible within dominant systems)

This resource is not about defining people by risk, it's about honoring resilience, creativity, and self-authorship.

For corporate teams, the zine offers a creative, nontraditional approach to supporting employee wellbeing, team cohesion, and sustained engagement beyond a single workshop or training. Rather than another one-time initiative, it provides a tangible, self-guided resource employees can return to, helping reinforce reflection, stress management, and creative problem-solving in ways that feel accessible and human. It's especially effective for organizations looking to deepen their investment in workplace culture, retention, and inclusive support practices without relying solely on formal or clinical frameworks.

Corporate Zine Applications:

- Supports employee wellbeing, stress reduction, and creative grounding
- Encourages self-directed engagement outside structured programming
- Serves as a unique, values-aligned leave-behind for events or onboarding
- Provides an inclusive tool that meets employees across roles and communication style

Why a Zine?

A zine is:

- Portable » easy to carry, revisit, and share
- Non-clinical » reduces barriers for those hesitant to engage with formal materials
- Creative + participatory » invites reflection without pressure
- Private » can be used safely and independently

Unlike worksheets or pamphlets, this zine becomes a companion, not just a handout.

REMEMBER: I'm also available to collaborate with your team in identifying and pursuing grant opportunities that can support this work. This includes contributing language, framing, and program details for proposals, as well as helping position the Guardian Monster Recovery Zine within broader funding priorities. While I don't take on full responsibility for securing funding, I serve as an active partner in the grant development process to strengthen applications and increase alignment with funder goals.
